Daylight Saving Time

On November 5, 2023, daylight saving time (DST) will be over for this year. That weekend we will move our clocks back one hour to reclaim the hour we lost in March. Though two states, Hawaii and Arizona, do not observe DST, and a number of states have passed laws to stay on it all year, until there is a national consensus regarding this issue, things will remain the way they are now. I don't know how you feel about "spring forward" and "fall back," but I'd prefer that we pick one and stay on it all the time. I'm not a fan of moving the clocks twice every year.

That said, I'd like for us to focus on the word "saving." Our attention is best served with two other ways to consider the word: 1) saving ourselves, and 2) trying to help others benefit from the saving power of Jesus' blood. We understand that when we submit to God's word, we can attain salvation by obeying the truth (1 Pet. 1:22ff), and by serving God faithfully (1 John 1:7-2:3). Part of our faithful service to God should be sharing the gospel with others (Matt. 13:1ff), sowing the seed everywhere.

So, regardless of how you feel about DST, be prepared to observe the “fall back” in November, get back that lost hour of sleep. But above all, let us be dedicated to the saving of lost souls.

~Freeman
