The Follower

July 27, 2025

We often say, "Every ending is a new beginning." And that's true in many cases—graduations, weddings, even the birth of a child: Each one closes a chapter, but opens the door to something new and often better.

But what about the endings that don't feel hopeful?

What about the endings that hurt?

The job that ended too soon.

The friendship that faded.

The goodbye we never wanted to say.

The moment we walk away from a grave.

In those moments, the idea of a "new beginning" feels distant. Hard to see. Maybe even hard to believe.

But as Christians, we serve a God who specializes in bringing life out of loss.

When Jesus died, it looked like the end. The tomb was sealed. The disciples scattered. Hope seemed buried.

But it was actually the beginning of everything God had promised.

So even when your ending doesn't come with balloons or happy tears—even when it feels like grief, or confusion, or letting go—don't forget who your God is.

He's the God of peace.

The God who sanctifies.

The God who starts new things from broken places.

"He who calls you is faithful; He will surely do it." (1 Thess. 5:24)

Hold on. Even endings that feel like loss can lead to beginnings that feel like grace.
